WHAT KIND OF SYMPTOMS SHOULD RAISE SUSPICION OF COVID-19 IN THE ELDERLY?

In fact, the complaints and symptoms of young and middle-aged people are not very different. Nevertheless, there will be some differences in the way the symptoms are perceived, and expressed. Senses and perception can be blunted due to difficulties and impairments in the structure and function of the nerves. For example, the perception of pain, which is sharper and more severe in young people, can be felt milder, more uncertain, or ill-defined in the elderly.

To give an extreme example, elderly people can even have a heart attack without chest pain. Fever does not increase sharply in the elderly as in young people. Similarly, we can think that all symptoms related to COVID-19 can be felt lighter, so the risk of being unrecognized will be substantial.

Pearl: In the elderly, too, the main complaints can be listed as fever, dry cough, and shortness of breath. There may be mild to severe sore throat, loss of sense of smell, weakness, muscle and joint pain, diarrhea, rarely runny nose, and cough with phlegm.

The important point here is that each patient will experience the disease with a different combination of symptoms and symptoms. For example, one patient

Cough: The elderly may experience chronic cough problems due to different reasons such as long-term smoking and chronic lung diseases. Therefore, it may be difficult for them to notice cough triggered by COVID-19.

Shortness of breath: For reasons similar to cough, many chronic problems may cause shortness of breath in the elderly. There is difficulty in distinguishing this from newly developed shortness of breath due to COVID-19. Furthermore, the development of shortness of breath in the elderly may cause rapid deterioration due to the decrease in other organ reserves.
